Trouble in the Camp.

Wednesday evening a caucus was held in the township of Beaupre for putting in nomination candidates for the several township offices. Heretofore a non-political ticket has been nominated and the township committee was made up without regard to politics, but two of them happened to be Democratic, and they signed a call for a Democratic caucus for Wednesday evening. The citizens turned out in good numbers and everything went along smoothly until an informal ballot was taken for Supervisor, when it was found that James Barclay, a Republican, had a majority. Then Supervisor Sullivan, the minority candidate, got up and announced that the caucus had been called as a simon pure Democratic caucus and no Republicans were to vote or be voted for. This created quite a flutter and caused considerable disgust even among many of the Democrats, and the result was about two-thirds of those present left, and the rump caucus proceeded to set up a ticket, and notwithstanding their claim to be a Democratic caucus, they nominated a Republican for one office, to give it character.

Sheriff Harrington left Saturday night with "Rip Van Winkle," the crazy man described last week, and placed him in the asylum at Pontiac, returning home Tuesday morning. By hard persuasion he induced the man to wash and remove several acres of soil from his person before taking his departure.

The Masonic brethren have presented Hon. Geo. W. Bell with an elegant Pastmaster's jewel in token of their brotherly love and affection, not so much as an honorary reward for the many services he has rendered the lodge, but more especially as a memento of their esteem toward him as a man and a Mason.

The Easter ball given by the Brass band Thursday evening was largely attended and proved a grand success, in every particular. The music was excellent, the band made a fine appearance and their drill was very interesting. They did themselves credit while playing a number of pieces during the evening. They realized about forty dollars, and those in attendance had a very enjoyable time.

Keep the Watch-Fire Burning.

An essay read before the W. C. T. U.

There is a period in all moral reform when it seems impossible to do anything but to stand and wait—an interval when there seems to be no progress made, when workers in the moral vineyard can do no more than prune a dead branch here and there, or plant a vine or two. We borrow from an ancient warlike custom, this admonition, "Keep the watch-fires burning." It seems dull work to the spirited soldier who enlisted for the ardent and strong employment of battle, to bring his fagots, and light them, and keep them burning that the friend of the cause he fights for may know where to rally.

How cheerless and cold the night air. How desolate sits the solitary sentinel as the slow-moving hours wearily pass. His duty seems irksome and profitless. He can let the fire die down till there is only a faint light left, yet, if he but reflect, what a glorious work he is doing. There are friends for his righteous cause, but they are scattered. They need a rallying place. That faint light on the mountain brow tells the wandering comrades where they may assemble. It is the strength of their languishing cause, wait and see what that flickering fire, kept burning through the dreary night has done. The companions in arms assemble slowly, one by one they come out of the darkness, grasp each other's hands, and swear fealty to the cause of truth and right. After making their plans of attack, they move upon the enemy's works with a momentum nothing can withstand. The battle is gained, victory perches upon the standards of the united band. Now the solitary night watches begin to realize the importance of their discouraging and spiritless task. What if the fires had gone out. No matter then how ardent the wish of each wardful of the little army, that their dearest rights should be maintained. Their strength was attenuated and they were powerless. It was the sentinel's beacon that brought them together, that made them invincible. So sisters, I think it is with us and our cause, especially here in this town where the temperance work is so unpopular and it is eminently proper that this society should be organized; that it let its moral light shine about through the darkness; that if we cannot be so aggressive as we wish, we can keep the watch-fires burning, that the friends of our cause may come out of the darkness, clasp hands with us. When the time for a forward movement comes, as come it will, the patient work we are doing in creating a public sentiment in favor of reform will not be in vain. There is something to encourage us. Much effective work has been done by our honored president, almost alone, among the children and youth of the place. Already we hear them reiterating the chorus, learned in the temperance school. We hear them conversing with each other and promising to reform from by-words and other bad habits of speech and manners. "Cast thy bread upon the waters and thou shalt find it after many days." None need enter the work of moral reform expecting an easy task. Patient waiting; a continuous discharge of duty; a trustful dependence on Him who notes even the sparrow's fall; a courage to labor on in the hope of victory even when circumstances are most discouraging; a wisdom which labors in the spirit of the sentiment so beautifully expressed by others thus:

"In essentials unity, in nonessentials liberty, in all things charity." Let these be the qualities which each member of our union shall contribute. May this little fire we have kindled in the midst of darkness continually grow brighter and brighter; may our movements find friends among all who ought to be interested in this great work until by and by as the result of a small beginning, temperance principals may prevail in Cheboygan.
